

CASA LEO

Casa Leo Between the Vernacular and the Contemporary Casa Leo is a residence that revives the symbolic value of the arch and the brick elements that have long been part of Mexico's architectural tradition and reinterprets them here as both an architectural gesture and a formal language. These motifs appear consistently throughout: in the facade's composition, in the large windows opening onto the garden, in the accent finishes highlighting the double-height interior, and in the wrought-iron railings that complete the ensemble. The house is organized around a spacious and versatile ground floor. The master bedroom is located on this level to ensure accessibility and independence. At the heart of the home lies a double-height living room a space that not only anchors social life but also...
