

CASA RAMMED EARTH

This exceptional estate marries modern, lowprofile architecture with the natural textures of San Miguel de Allende's landscape. Twelve linear volumes in earthy rammedearth tones are connected by two central corridors, organizing the home into distinct yet fluid zones. Every element—from the parota wood joinery to the native stone and handtextured finishes—is drawn from local sources, ensuring the design feels both rooted and timeless. The design draws inspiration from the grandeur of Mexican haciendas, or lavish Spanish colonial houses, whose expansive estates are centered around courtyards and lush gardens. Conceived with a vision to amplify its presence and deep connection to its surroundings, the home reinterprets the traditional hacienda layout, organizing its spaces around...
